

Nora Young is the host and the creator of ‘Spark’, CBC’s national radio show and podcast about technology and culture. ‘Spark’ is a fun and informative look at new technology, with an eye to understanding how it is changing our relationships, our work, and our culture.

Nora was also the founding host of the CBC Radio show, ‘Definitely not the Opera’, where she often focused on new media and technology. Her journalism has also been featured in print, online, and on TV.

As a journalist, author, and speaker, Nora explores how new technology shapes the way we understand ourselves and the world around us. Her book, The Virtual Self, on the explosion of data about our behaviours, opinions, and actions, is published by McClelland and Stewart.

Nora’s mother was a proud member of University Women in Toronto, which was an important part of her commitment to lifelong learning, a passion she passed on to her daughter.
